are mistaken. I know he is very sick, but he is not going to die. You know what a strong boy he is; the doctor says his constitution is splendid. He will be better soon; indeed, I believe he breaths more easily now," and she knelt by the bed and laid her cheek on the little hot hand,

"Mary, child! you must be resigned to the will of God. 'The Lord gave,' and if he takes him away you must give him up."

"Aunt, will you go out, please, for a while? I would like to be alone with him now."

When the older woman had gone, Mary Eastbrook went and shut the door and came back quite calmly to the bedside, and, leaning over her treasure, she looked searchingly at every feature.

All at once, like a great black wave, it rushed over her that Aunt Martha had spoken the truth, the awful truth. She saw it herself; the seal of death was upon her darling, and she—Oh! the mad agony of desolation that swept over her!

Chimham die! Why, he was to be a great man in the world; he was born for higher and nobler things than common children. From the hour of his birth, and by the name she had given him, had he not been set apart for a brilliant destiny? No, he could not, he must not die! When he had grown old, and the world had rung with the name of Chimham Eastbrook. then God might take him, but not now, oh, not now!" and she flung herself upon her knees and cried mightily upon God.

"Heal him, blessed Lord," she wailed; "spare him, O spare my only one! Let him live to work for thee! I have given him to thee, but, oh! leave him yet longer with me. I [illegible] give him up.

"Look!" she said; "
